MERCANTILE WHARF APARTMENTS

MERCANTILE WHARF APARTMENTS - BOSTON

The wharf building was constructed in 1857, and was built as a storage warehouse to support nearby Quincy Market. Shipping related businesses originally occupied the upper floors, which included sail makers and riggers.

The building actually bordered the waterfront at that time, and thus why it was named a wharf. Gridley Bryant was the architect, son of the builder of the Bunker Hill Monument.

The project includes the conversion of 7 units to handicap accessible units and the creation of a new management office, maintenance shop and community room.

A temporary community room was setup in the eventual maintenance shop in order to give the residents a place to meet. Below is the original open space before this space was constructed.
